

NOTES OF INTEREST

2nd ANNUAL NAACI CONFERENCE

This issue continues the presentation of papers from the first NAACI conference which was held in Austin, Texas. As most of you are aware, the second annual conference will be held at Western Carolina University on June 9 and 10. The theme of the second conference is Community of Inquiry: Theory and Practice in the Classroom and in Teacher Formation. Please send in your reservations early as space is limited (see ad on page 69 of this issue). Please send registration materials to David Kennedy, Department of Human and Environmental Studies, Western Carolina University, Cullowhee, NC 28723.

7th ICPIC CONFERENCE

The other big conference news is the seventh International Conference on Philosophy for Children to be held in Melbourne, Australia. The themes of the conference are: Beginning in wonder, Making sense of the world, The self among others, Voices of reason and reasonableness, and Thinking and living in a global world. The conference dates are July 10 - 15. (See ad on page 68 of this issue.)

ON THE INTERNET

I would also like to alert readers of AT of the Philosophy for Children Internet list. Richard Anthone of Belgium has set up the list. It allows conversations and "cyberspace dialogues" on issues important to philosophy, international dialogue and philosophy for children. I have not been an active participant in any of these dialogues and conversations but have been greatly informed by them. I have been what the "kids" call a "lurker," what we in philosophy for children might call a passive participant, that is, intently interested and internally active but not participating in the conversation. If you would like to get on the list contact Richard Anthone at "Richard.Anthone@belspo.be"

POSTAGE WOES

One last bit of unpleasant business; postage in the USA has gone up considerably this year. So beginning with the current renewals, we must raise our subscription prices to $20.00 per year ($38.00 for two years) to cover the increased cost of mailing. The new prices have been noted on renewal forms you will receive in this issue if your subscription is about to expire.

Art for this issue was provided by Corey Baker, a fourth-year Viterbo art student.
